Tim Cook is a graduate of Trent University (Honours History) and of the Masters of War Studies program at the Royal Military College of Canada. His thesis on the Canadian Corps and gas warfare in the First World War won the Barry Hunt award and he has published articles based on that research in Vanguard, The Journal of Military History and the Bulletin of Material History. That manuscript is now being considered by a publisher. After working in several divisions at the National Archives of Canada, he is now an archivist in Government Archives and Records Disposition.

Barbara L. Craig is Associate Professor of archive studies and Director of the Centre for Research in Information Studies in the Faculty of Information Studies at the University of Toronto. Prior to her appointment in August 1993, she was the Archivist of York University (North York, Ontario) and the Head of the Archives and Special Collections Department of the Scott Library from 1989, and an archivist at the Archives of Ontario from 1970. She has a Ph.D. in Archive Studies, has undertaken extensive research into hospital archives in Canada, the United States, and the United Kingdom, and has published widely on the history of record-keeping, the history of medicine and medical archives, and archive theory. A past Chair of the Ontario Council of Archives, an officer of the Association of Canadian Archivists in many capacities, and a Director of the Ontario Women's History Network, Dr. Craig is the Chair of the Canadian Council of Archives Preservation Committee, Reviews Editor of the American Archivist, and an active participant in the growing Health Archives Information Group (HAIG) in Ontario. A Canada-wide health archives information network based on a web-site and a 1-800 service is operated under her direction. Most recently she was Theme Editor of Archivaria 41, an issue devoted to medical archives.

Wendy Duff is an assistant professor at the University of Toronto, Faculty of Information Studies. She received her PhD from the University of Pittsburgh. While doing her doctoral work she was the project coordinator for the University of Pittsburgh Electronic Recordkeeping Project. She has written numerous articles on various aspects of archival description, electronic records, and access to archival material. She is presently co-investigator for a usage analysis study for a Digitization and Access Project funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. A goal of the project is to study use patterns of a digital collection model compared to a print or fiche model. She is chair of the Canadian Committee on Archival Description, a member of the Encoded Archival Description Working Group, and was a member of International Archival Description Adhoc Commission on Descriptive Standards. Her primary research interests are metadata, user studies, archival description, and electronic records.

Mark Greene received his MA in history, with a cognate in archival administration, from the University of Michigan and served as Archivist of Carleton College from 1985 through 1989, when he assumed his current position, Curator of Manuscripts Acquisition at the Minnesota Historical Society. In that position, he is the Society's "lead worker" on acquiring and appraising business records, congressional collections and records of philanthropy, and has led two major reappraisal projects. He has published eleven archival and historical articles, and was the recipient of the Margaret Cross Norton Award from Archival Issues in 1995. He has served as President of the Midwest Archives Conference, Chair of the Society of American Archivists' Manuscripts Repository Section and SAA's Congressional Papers Roundtable, and co-chair of SAA's Committee on Education and Professional Development.
